

THE GIRL WHO LISTENED TO THE WIND

In a quiet village tucked between hills, people lived happily until the winds stopped blowing.

Without wind, the mill didn't turn, the fields grew dry, and the river stayed still.

Many tried to bring the wind back, but nothing worked.

One day, a curious girl named Meera climbed the Whispering Hill.

She closed her eyes and listened.

Faintly, she heard the wind trapped behind the Stone Peaks, sad that people had forgotten to thank it.

Meera stood up and called out, "Dear Wind, we're sorry! Please come back and play with us."

Her kindness touched the wind.

It danced through the valleys, spun the mill, swayed the trees, and brought life back to the village.

From that day, the villagers thanked the wind every morning.

MORAL

Kind words and a kind heart can bring back even what seems lost.

THE MOON PAINTER

In a quiet town where night was always the same, the moon began to lose its glow.

It turned pale, then gray, and soon the sky looked dull and sad.

Everyone wondered what had happened, but no one knew how to help.

There lived a little boy named Ishan. He loved colors more than anything.

One night, he saw the moon looking lonely and whispered, "Don't worry, I'll bring your light back."

Ishan climbed to the roof of his house with a box of paints and his old paintbrush.

Every night, when the town slept, he painted the moon with gentle strokes—silver, blue, pink, and gold.

Slowly, the moon began to shine again, brighter than ever before.

The town never knew who painted it, but every night they looked up in wonder.

And Ishan smiled, because kindness is most beautiful when it is done in secret.

MORAL

*Small acts of kindness, done with love, can light
up the world.*

THE CLOCK THAT FORGOT TIME

High above the village stood an old clock tower. For hundreds of years, it had kept perfect time.

One day, the big clock stopped.
The hands froze, the bells fell silent,
and time in the village stood still.

People didn't grow old, but nothing moved forward either. The baker didn't bake, the farmer didn't sow,
and the children stopped dreaming.

A curious boy named Aarav climbed the winding stairs to the top.

"Why have you stopped?" he asked the clock.

The clock sighed, "I have ticked for so long, I forgot why. I never had time to enjoy a single moment."

Aarav smiled and sat beside it.

He showed the clock the sunrise,
the laughter of children, the blooming flowers, and the beauty of raindrops.

Slowly, the clock began to smile again.

Its hands started moving, its bells rang loud, and time flowed gently through the village.

From that day, the clock never just measured time—it celebrated it.

MORAL

Enjoy every moment, for time is not just to measure life, but to make life beautiful.

THE LITTLE STAR COLLECTOR

Once, in a quiet village by the hills, there lived a little girl named Anaya who loved the night sky more than anything in the world.

Every night, she saw tiny stars falling from the sky and disappearing behind the hills. Everyone said, "They are gone forever."

But Anaya didn't believe that.

She made a little basket and climbed the hill every night to collect the fallen stars before they could vanish.

The stars were not cold or heavy. They glowed softly, like tiny candles, and whispered secrets in her hands.

One night, a star spoke and said, "We are not lost. We are dreams that people forget."

Anaya asked, "Dreams?"

The star nodded, "Yes. When someone stops believing in their dreams, we fall from the sky."

From that day, Anaya collected every fallen star and kept them in glass jars, cleaning them with love and care.

Slowly, she returned the stars to people who had forgotten their dreams—a boy who wanted to paint, a girl who wanted to sing, an old woman who wanted to write stories.

As their dreams returned, the stars went back to the sky, brighter than before.

Anaya never kept a star for herself. She knew that happiness shines more when it is shared.

And so, the little girl became a legend known as the Little Star Collector.

MORAL

*Our dreams are precious.
Nurture them, share them,
and help others shine.*

THE FOREST OF SLEEPING COLORS

In a land far away, there was a forest where all the colors had fallen asleep.

The trees were gray, the flowers were white, and even the butterflies had forgotten how to paint their wings.

People said the forest had lost its joy because no one cared to see its beauty.

One day, a brave little explorer named Tara wandered into the quiet forest. She noticed a tiny shape hiding under a stone—a small, broken jar filled with glistening dust.

As she opened it, the dust whispered, “We are the colors of this forest. We fell asleep when the world stopped hoping.”

Tara promised to wake them up.

She sprinkled the red dust on a tired rose. It blushed.

She sprinkled the green dust on a dry tree. It blossomed with leaves.

She sprinkled the blue dust on the stream. It sparkled like a sapphire.

One by one, the colors woke up, painting the forest with life, laughter, and light.

The animals returned, the birds sang, and the forest danced with happiness.

Tara smiled and whispered, “Beauty returns when someone chooses to care.”

MORAL

When you care for the world around you, it blooms with wonder and joy.

